TAIF, Sept. 11 (SPA) — Leaders of omalia and Kenya have told Crown Prince and they want to normalize relations beteen their two states and promote increased poperation in their part of Africa, Foreign finister Prince Saud Al Faisal said Tuesday.

The prince was commenting on the third ay of the joint visit by President Daniel Arap Moi of Kenya and President Siad Barre of Somalia, whose two countries have been mbroiled in a territorial dispute for almost wo decades.

"Such a desire for peace and stability by he two leaders will lead to a special relationhip between them cemented by friendship, good neighborliness and mutual interests," Prince Sand said. And later Tuesday night, reinforcing Prince Saud's comments, a senior Somali official said the talks with Prince Fahd had been " successful and satisfactory.'

Since the two men arrived here Sunday, Crown Prince Fahd has heldseveral meetings with them, both together and separately, and those contacts continued Tuesday.

In his statement as the talks drew to the end of their third day, Prince Saud said the day's discussions with Moi centered on Arab-African cooperation, Saudi-Kenyan relations and Arab, African and world problems.

The PLO's promised land

By Jim Mair

BEIRUT, Sept. 11 (OFNS) -- Jimmy Carter says no Arab leader wants it. Yasser Arafat says there will be no peace without it. Menahem Begin says over his dead body, but two former beads of Israeli military intelligence believe it is inevitable. One way or another, the idea of an independent Palestinian state on the West Bank and Gaza Strip is increasingly under discussion as a solution to over 30 years of Arab-Israeli violence.

But could it work? The question seems to fall neatly into two halves. Would such a state be economically viable? And would it function politically, by finally settling the Palestine question, and thus defusing the Arab-Israeli conflict?

To the economic question, the simple answer is, 'Why not?' There is no clearly defined criterion for economic viability. Many States exist in dire poverty, or are heavily dependent on other nations. Others prosper despite harsh circumstances.

Economic models for such a Palestine have been advanced in a number of academic studies, which provide entirely plausible, if arbitrary, blueprints for the state. One recent work estimated that it would cost around $ 9 to billion to finance job-creation and housing in a five-year program to resettle some 1,700,000 refugees alongside the existing population of around 1,150,000 in the West Bank and Gaza.

The Palestinians have the highest degree of at education in the Arab world, and are among the most successful, dynamic and motivated in many fields. Many wealthy Palestinians and highly paid workers would probably remain where they are, but would pour money into the new state in the form of family remittances, investments, and endowments.

The Arabs would likely fall over one another to pump money into the state, for emotional and political reasons and as a sound investment in regional stability.

But economic projections must clearly remain in the realm of fantasy unless the political conditions are right. Any discussion must make the massive assumption that Israel, the regional super-power, would permit the creation of such a state. Whether the move would succeed in settling the Palestinian question must be up to the Palestinians themselves, for only they can decide whether they regard their problem as solved. In practice, we are talking about the PLO. It is, now and for the foreseeable future, the major instrument, reflecting and influencing the views of the Palestinians both in exile and under occupation. Andrew Young and Moshe Dayan are the latest of many to acknowledge this role by seeking the views of PLO figures. It is a fact of current Middle East politics that no overall settlement stands a chance of success if the PLO opposes it. Equally, the West Bank State project could succeed only with the PLO's wholehearted involvement, who else could direct the resetthement of refugees and creation of state infrastructure? And, for the PLO, and independent State is an absolute minimum. Anything else would not meet the twin needs for national identity and a home for the refugees. Most people who have contact with the PLO are in no doubt that it would accept such a state, coexisting with Israel within a partitioned Palestine on a basis of mutual recognition. The principle of such a state has been enshrined in resolutions of the Palestine National Congress, the PLO's Parliament. But it is still notoriously difficult to get any PLO official to say categorically that this would be the end of the story.

The PLO is coy because if feels it is being asked to reveal its minimum position before the game has begun. In fact, those 'moderate' PLO leaders who would accept such a deal are ahead of many of their people. The subject is still deeply divisive. When a leading Palestinian intellectual and moderate, Professor Walid Khalidi, entitled a recent study of the future state 'Thinking the Unthinkable'.. he did not mean it was unthinkable only from the Israeli and Western viewpoints.

Tell. Paic onitins in the diaspora and you begin to see why. There are about 2.4 million of them, and most originate from what is now Israel proper, not from the West Bank or Gaza. Hassan, for example, is an fessional who came back to help the Palestinian cause, 'What do you mean, go back to the West Bank? he asks. I've never been there in my life! Yes, I would help build the state on the West Bank, but I would consider myself short-changed. I want to get my house in Haifa back. I would work with anybody who continued the struggle, even if it meant losing the State.'

This is an extreme and minority view, since even Hassan admits that his own people would turn against the small number who would risk the new gain by carrying on the struggle. He also grudgingly admits tactics might change — 'We won't have time for raids: we'll be busy setting up house' - and that future generations, born in Palestine, might forget their roots in Haifa or Jaffa.

But the basic sentiments are widely shared. and the right of return to Israel proper - the sharpest bone for Israel to swallow - is still insisted on by the PLO.

Virtually every Palestinian adult remembers his home in what is now Israel, one PLO official said, 'Not all would want to go back, but at least some lip-service would have to be paid to a right which is enshrined everywhere. It's of more emotional importance even than the state. At present, no Palestinian assembly would approve any formual which did not include the right of return - though time may help.' Neither would any Palestinian envisage a state without East Jerusalem as its

In practice, any PLO state would be at Israel's mercy, and would not dare risk provocations. The vast bulk of the refugees would, under PLO direction, almost certainly opt for security and peace in the new state, though it would mean settling for only 23 per cent of Palestine. But they would continue to dream of Haifa and Jaffa, and their presence in a state on Palestinian soil might generate peaceful economic, social and political forces which some Israelis see as the real long-term threat to the Zionist vision of a Jewish State. It is no longer unthinkable, but a Palestinian state would be a calculated step into the unknown for all concerned. Could it bring anything worse than the last 31 years? And is there a better alternative for tackling the KUWAIT, Sept. 11 (SPA) - A Kuwaiti national. Ahmad Abbas Al-Mahdi, has been arrested for organizing political seminars without permission from the authorities.

Addressing reporters after Fahd and Moi met, Prince Saud said the two leaders see eye-to-eye on the Palestinian question, which was recently highlighted as a key issue for Africa by the summit of the Organization for African Unity.

He said the two leaders discussed liberation struggles, resistance to colonialism, and racism in Africa, and agreed on the importance of cooperation and joint action to confront those and other problems.

Saud said the two states expressed satisfaction at the development of their ties in recent years, and added that their presence in the same geographical region made it natural that there should be strong bonds between the two states.

The senior Somali official, Minister for Presidential Affairs Omar Arteh, said the viewpoints expressed by his country and the Kingdom" were identical on matters discus-

He said those matters included bilateral relations, the situation in the Horn of Africa, and the Middle East problem.

Arteh did not comment directly on the situation involving his country and Kenya, but his comments on other issues were uniformly positive.

EEC may exceed oil consumption targets this year, Brunner says make certain their international purchasing

By Michael J. Hall

JEDDAH, Sept. 11 - The European Economic Community may not be able to live up to its commitment to hold down oil consumption this year, a senior EEC official said in Brussels Tuesday.

The remarks by EEC energy commissioner
Guido Brunner contrasts with the impression given by Danish officials to Saudi Minister of Petroleum and Mineral Resources Sheikh Ahmed Zaki Yamani that the EEC states would do their utmost to meet their target.

(An in-depth interview with Brunner on the European response to world energy issues will appear in next week's issue of Saudi Business, available here Saturday.) The Danish assurances were given over the past few days by Foreign Minister Henning Christophersen, who left here Tuesday at the end of a four day stay. . EEC ministers had pledged at their summit meeting in Strasbourg in June to hold oil imports to their 1978 levels through 1985.

In response, Danish journalists reported Monday that Yamani told Christophersen ng their talks that Saudi Arabia was prepared to continue producing 9.5 million barrels a day of oil for the rest of this year.

The Kingdom raised its ceiling on crude exports on July 1 for a three month period, adding one million barrels daily in production to the 8.5 million barrels the country had been lifting. Danish journalists travelling with Christ-

ophersen said Yamani had told the Danish minister he sees a "reasonable" balance in world oil supply and demand over the next few years, but warned of eventual disaster if industrialized states didn't cut crude consumption to 1977 and 1978 levels. Yamani also reportedly told Christophersen that he sees a "50-50 chance" that the organization of Petroleum Exporting. Countries will not increase prices at its upcoming meeting in Caracas in December.

But he was quoted as saying that he sees no chance of a longer period of price stability because oil producing nations are resolved to power is not eroded by inflation in the West. In his comments in Brussels, Brunner said that the 1985 oil consumption targets set at the Strasbourg summit in June may not be met until 1990.

Brunner's comments came in a report to the European parliament. He said the limit imposed for 1979 consumption of 500 million tons of oil for Common Market members was likely to be exceeded.

His comments followed leakage of a confidential report to the European commission

The late September meeting will be a follow-up to earlier conferences this year, including the Strasbourg meeting and a later economic summit in Tokyo at which leaders of the Western industrialized states and Japan pledged to hold down energy consumption.

In remarks quoted by Danish newspapers Monday, Yamani is reported to have praised not only the energy conservation efforts in the West, but also attempts by the EEC and International Energy Agency to control major oil companies use of the spot market.

According to the Danish reports, Yamani said the Kingdom would be willing to cut deliveries if necessary to companies caught manipulating oil shipments and prices.

At a press conference Monday, Christophersen said that he and Yamani had discussed country-to-country oil sales - bypassing the oil companies entirely - but that no such deal was pending between Denmark and the Kingdom.

He said the subject of direct sales was raised in view of an increasing tendency by oil-producing states to sell their oil directly. "It has become increasingly important to us to know how this new policy will develop. We do not want the few big oil companies to dominate the world market," Christophersen

Baha'i sect hits at Iran mobs

LONDON, Sept. 11 (AP) - Officials of the worldwide Baha'i religious sect in London claimed Monday that mobs in Iran have destroyed the home of the sect's founder and that other Baha'i-owned property has been confiscated, burned or demolished in recent months.

The officials said some 79 houses, offices, cemeteries and other property have been attacked despite assurances of protection by Iranian authorities since February's overthrow of the Shah by revolutionary forces led by Ayatollah Khomeini, spiritual leader of Iran's Shiite Muslims. No

Zia renews pledge to hold polls on time

ISLAMABAD, Sept. 11 (AP) - President Gen. Muhammad Zia Ul-Haq has repeated his pledge that national elections will be held Nov. 17 as scheduled.

A new law which requires all contenders in the November elections to register with the election commission has been sharply criticized by many politicians. The law also provides that foreign funded parties, and those which try to create lawlessness or agitate against the judiciary and the armed forces, will be banned from the polls. Asked whether he would ask for support from these parties to forestall a confrontation between them and the government, Zia told a news conference Monday "We do not need their support. Some time one has to decide. The regulation has been introduced in order to prune out the mushroom growth of political parties. The political parties also need some sanity.

"If the political parties do not have discipline in their own ranks they do not maintain account of their funds, and do not hold elections to the party offices, how can they bring discipline and democracy to Pakistan when they come into power?" he added.

Political terrorism

ISTANBUL, Sept. 11 (AP) — A leftist lawyer was shot and killed in his office by suspected rightwing gunmen Monday while political terrorism continued in other parts of Turkey, police said. Ceyhun Can, a founding member of the Marxist Turkish Labor Party, was the latest victim of an escalating campaign of terror by extremists who have disrupted the country since mid-1975. Can was gunned down by pistol fire from two or three assailants, a police spokesman in Adana, southern Turkey, reported.

A left-wing teacher was killed when he was overrun by a car when he attempted to escape the scene of an armed clash between rival political mobs in Bursa, about 300 kilometers south of here, sources said. Another student was killed in a separate gun-

The day's fourth victim was in the eastern Turkish city of Gaziantep.

Ambush-killings believed to be staged by extremists take a daily toll of about four persons despite the martial law that is in force in 19 of 67 provinces.

A spokesman for the main opposition, the Conservative Justice Party claimed that more than ,000 persons have died in terror incidents since Social-Democrat Premier Bulent Ecevit came to power 20 months ago.

The charge has been refuted by the government. Although there is no accurate tabulation for deaths attributed to terrorism, the figure is estimated to be more than 1,500 since Ecevit took over, pledging to halt a rapid deterioration in law and order.

Meanwhile, sources said new anti-terrorism measures were being considered for the upcoming academic year at Turkey's institutions of higher learning to prevent confrontations between followers of rightist and leftist ideology.

since Tito returned from China two years ago after marking a reconciliation between the two Communist countries after 20 years of recrimination.

The improvement of Sino-Yugoslav relations led to increased strain in relations between Belgrade and Moscow. Highly-placed sources in Belgrade said Yugoslavia was satisfied with the final text of the Havana summit, with its condemnation of domination of other countries by both superpowers. But Tito, the only surviving founding father of the 96-member movement, received less attention than Yugoslavia had hoped in the fight against what Belgrade regarded as attempts to swing the movement towards Moscow. Tito was to low-key in his presentation of the case for the mod-

Thais reportedly missing chance to crush rebels

BANGKUK, Sept. 11 (AP) ---Struggles among communist nations in Asia appear to have provided Thailand with one of its best opportunities in a costly, 14-year war against communist guerrillas. But some analysts think Bangkok is not taking full advantage of it.
"The Communist Party of

Thailand (CPT) is in disarray both ideologically and operationally," says one Western diplomat." This is a time of trial and testing for the communists — and should be one of real action for the govern-

The government has these potential advantages to work with:

- Neighboring pro-Chinese Cambodia used to provide sanctuary and training bases to Thailand's pro-Chinese communists. Between November 1977 and December 1978, an estimated 40 per cent of incidents initiated by communists occurred along the Cambodian border. A Vietnamese invasion has taken Cambodia out of the Chinese orbit - and the Thai Communists out of Cam-the le bodia. -- Laos also has made a decisively pro-Vietnamese, antie turn and late last year told the Thai communists there to go back to Thailand or take a trip to China. What the CPT will do to replace the valuable links with China through Laos is uncertain. - The Sino-Vietnamese confrontation over Cambodia has led to closer ties between Peking and Bangkok. Rebel radio, broadcastmg from southern China, has been off the air - for the first time in 17 years - since July 11. Some believe the silence is part of warm ing Thai-Chinese relations.

- Defectors and Thai military officers say rifts within the communist camps have sparked serious debate in the CPT, with some questioning whether the party should reconsider its hitherto straunchly Maoist line in favor of ties with Vietnam and the Soviet Union or go for an independent, indigenous party model.

Supreme Command deputy chief of staff Gen. Thuanthong Suvanadat said Bangkok was continuing its amnesty program for defectors and its propaganda effort among the Thai rural population, and was using a " political warfare concept" adopted from Others say they have seen no special concentration of effort or innovation over the past year.

"We're letting an opportunity slide, slip by default. There are lots of programs — but no real policy or direction," says one Thai military counter-insurgency expert. Citing several examples, Western military sources say the Thais were not aggressive enough in netting CPT guerrillas forced out of Cambodia and Laos.

These analysts also are careful to downplay some reports of major splits in CPT ranks, saying only a small number — perhaps as few as 100 people - have left the CPT to form a pro-Vietnamese group. There is every indication that the party's politburo and cen-

China party daily cautions against building Mao cult

PEKING, Sept. 11 (AP) — Twenty-four hours after commemorating the third anniversary of the death of Mao Tse-tung, the People 's Daily warned Monday against deffying him or giving him sole credit for the communist revolution.

In a long commentary on the writing of party history, the official Communist Party paper said that the contributions of the late Premier Chou En-lai, Marshal Chu Teh and other old-time revolutionaries should be recog-

"The great contributions of the leader should not be underestimated and the leader should not be deified either," it said, Mao died Sept. 9, 1976 at age 82.

"To describe comrade Mao Tse-Tung as not having made any mistakes is not a Marxist approach and is not in conformity with his own self-assessment," it said.

We have a group of party leaders, but not just a single individual. All victories won are the result of the collective struggle. Comrades Chou En-lai, Chu Teh and other old proletarian revolutionaries are the main members of this group. They also are the beloved leaders of the Chinese people."

The commentary by historian Yuch Bing follows wide coverage in all newspapers of Mao's death anniversary.

The People's Daily Monday recailed an old slogan which said party history should be studied with the inner-party struggle as the key and Mao's works as the textbook.

"This slogan gave prominence to the role of the individual and exaggerated the struggle between the two lines," it said. "We must emancipate our minds and eliminate the pernicious influence of modern superstitution and give prominence to party activities in the study and teaching of party

After taking this slap at Mao and his works, it went on to say that, of course, Mao's writings should be read but that the important writings of the revolutionaries of the "old generation," and those of Chou in particular, were essential to the teaching of party his-

MUCH ADO

As contacts around the Middle East problem intensify once more the phrase that comes to mind is "much ado about nothing." Everyone seems to be rushing around furiously, with the only perceptible result being the already agreed gradual Israeli withdrawal from Sinai.

President Sadat came back from Haifa a few days ago, where he said there was no need for Palestinian participation in the peace process. The present talks, he said, were only preliminaries. It would take at least three years for anything of substance to happen. But in Cairo yesterday, he called upon the United States to negotiate with the PLO for a solution to the problem of Palestinian participation in the peace negotiations.

Mr. Mubarak, the Egyptian vice president, is now in Washington delivering a letter from the Egyptian president to President Carter. It is not known whether the letter reflects Sadat's Haifa views or the Cairo views which he made public in an interview with American television.

By the time Mubarak is back in Cairo, Israeli Foreign Minister Dayan and Egyptian Defense Minister Ali will be in Washington to discuss the question of the international force in Sinai, Ezer Weizman, Israel's defense minister, is already in Washington on a negotiation mission. Mubarak will return home via Vienna, where he is due to meet Chancellor Bruno Kreisky. The chancellor is playing an honorable role in attempts to obtain United States and Western European recognition for the PLO. It was as a part of this attempt that he held the now famous meeting with Yasser

The United States itself has also been active. Envoy Strauss is now in Israel to continue his consultations on the question of Palestinian representation. It was Strauss who reported back to Washington Israel and Egypt's rejection of changing or displacing U.N. Resolution 242 to include a form of recognition of Palestinian rights. It was this which led to the postponement of the Security Council debate on the issue. It appears now that Strauss wants to approach the problem from a different angle, one which would avoid a clash with the Egyptians and the Israelis, and might in the end lead to PLO participation in the talks.

The quickest and simplest way to achieve this is still that of direct U.S. approach to the PLO. But here that old difficulty will arise: The American administration has put a price on such a contact — PLO prior recognition of Israel. The PLO, not unnaturally, has consistently refused to meet this. It cannot offer recognition, its most valuable political card, at this early stage of the game. Guarantees as to the outcome have to be obtained first. The PLO, of course, has already given enough indications of willingness to negotiate directly with the Americans, provided no prior conditions are attached. But this would constitute an implied American recognition of the PLO: something which Israel would go to any lengths to prevent.

All this, a: ve said, is pervaded by an air of inconclusiveness. But if one was particularly looking for positive signs, there is only this modest one on show: If contacts are yet to prove useful, they are at least not actually harmful. In any case, the more the question of recognition of the PLO as sole representatives of the people of Palestine is raised, the nearer it inches towards solution.

THE RHODESIA SUMMIT

As the various parties to the Rhodesia Conference gather in London, there are precious few signs that their effort towards solving this entangled problem will be successful. The intransigent statements of position made by the respective heads of delegations will hardly assist Mrs. Thatcher. Britain's prime minister, in her complicated task.

The conference has its background in the last Commonwealth Conference in Zambia. Mrs. Thatcher found herself there faced with concerted pressure from the test of the Commonwealth leadership, owing to the stand her party had taken on the Rhodesia issue. Mrs. Thatcher's idea of a constitutional conference in London, preparing for new general election in Rhodesia, was welcomed by the Commonwealth as a reasonable compromise

With the conference about to open, there were some tokens of good faith from some of the would-be participants — such as Robert Mugabe's release of twelve civilians held by his forces in Mozambique, and the withdrawal from that country of the Rhodesian forces recently operating there. Yet it would be too facile to tath; them as indicating that willingness to compromise necessary to a peaceful solution. The primary difficulty is in the irreconcilable differences in interest berween the various sides to the struggle. The prime minister of Zimbabwe-Rhodesia, Bishop Abel Muzorewa, still hopes for a complete British recognition of his government. He opposes new elections because he has seen his popular and parliamentary support eroding owing to the pressure of continuing armed conflict in the country.

The Patriotic Front on the other hand, led by Robert Mugabe in Mozambique and Joshua Nkomo in Zambia, still hopes for an outright military victory. Nkomo has frankly declared on arrival to London that he will allow no one to steal the final victory from his people.

In the third corner stands the white minority represented by Ian Smith, the former prime minister. While he has lost a great deal of influence after the troubled settlement with Muzorewa, he is still capable of creating a great deal of trouble, once he feels that the proposed solution would threaten the interests of his constituency. Not least among the cards he still holds is South African support. While the South African government has been cautious over Rhodesia, not wishing to add to its troubles with America and Britain, it would certainly throw its weight behind Smith and the white minority to prevent a Communist or pro-Communist take-over.

To all this we must add an important consideration. It is that Mrs. Thatcher's government was driven to call for the conference by the pressure exerted on it in Lusaka. As such, it cannot be seen as sufficiently motivated to pursue the difficult path of formulating a solution and then overseeing its

It is also to be noted that Mrs. Thatcher's policies over Rhodesia are no longer identifiable with that of the United States. The previous Labor inistration in Britain kept in close touch with the Carter Administration

Finally, one must remember, in the prevailing gloom over the chances of the conference, that the declared positions at the beginning of such sessions are not necessarily the real or at least the ultimate ones. A willingness to compromise by one side might be answered by a compromise from another.

Ambivalence over Iran in Havana

By Susan Linnee

HAVANA -Nicaragua was the darling of the sixth nonaligned summit conference, but there was an ambivalent attitude toward Iran, another new member that recently won a revolution.

Members of the Nicaraguan delegation, some dressed in military fatigues and sporting red and black armbands of the Sandinista liberation movement, attracted attention and sympathy on the floor of the plenary meeting and in news conferences. But while most conference speakers praised the Iranian revolution for overthrowing Shah Mohammed Reza Pahlavi, the impression remained that the new Iran is an unknown quantity. Many nonaligned nations would like to love it but aren't certain they should or can.

Reasons for the difference in welcome given to Nicaragua and Iran by the nonaligned are complex. Iran's condemnation of Israel and suspension of oil sales to Tel Aviv and South Africa earned praise for the Islamic republic. But the treatment of Iranian Marxists, the handling of the Kurdish uprising and difficulties with ethnic Arabs in the southern part of the country caused confusion and concern.

The head of Afghanistan's Soviet-backed revolutionary military council, Nur Muhammad Tarraki, warned Iran in a news conference against 'interfering' in Afghan internal affairs, claiming that his country's Muslims were "under pressure" victorious Sandinistas and appeared to be avoiding the limelight. Iran's delegation included no mullahs, who have come to symbolize the religious nature of the Islamic revolution. During a news conference, Foreign Minister

Fading Kurds leave little resolved

By Nicholas Cumming-Bruce TEHRAN —

Silhouettes of army sentinels, gun barrels and radio aerials scar the skyline of the rolling hills around the western Iranian city of Mahabad.

Until early this week it was the heart of Kurdish guerrilla resistance to the government of Ayatollah Khomeini, who has ordered their destruction. In a surprisingly swift advance by infantry and armoured units early this week, the army swept into Mahabad and other Kurdish-held towns of strategic importance and established military control for the first time since the revolution.

Observers had feared the operation would be long and painful but it was carried out with minimal casualties, in contrast to the bloody, drawn-out battles that erupted last month in the Kurdish towns of Paveh and Saqqez, after the blundering intervention of Islamic revolutionary guards.

Kurdish guerrillas put up a token resistance as columns of troops and tanks closed in on Mahabad, but they delayed the advance by only a few hours.

Heavy shooting broke out as the soldiers approached Kurdish defences on the outskirts of the city, but when jet fighters, helicopter gunships and artillery bombarded their positions, the guerrillas, and a large number of residents, slipped away to mountain hide-outs.

The same day, troops pushed through winding mountain passes into the town of Baneb, and on Thursday, after new operations by helicopter gunships, the army took over the border towns of Sar-dasht, situated in mountainous terrain where it was thought the guerrillas might try to make a stand.

The operation was a morale-boosting success for the army, still recovering from the shattering blow inflicted on its organization and discipline by the Military commanders acted with a prudence and deliberation that contrasted with the antics of revolutionary guards and suggested an interesting degree of independence from religious leaders in

But the country's leaders obtained few obvious gains from the campaign, which, according to Prime Minister Mehdi Bazargan, was unleashed by Ayatollah Khomeini on the basis of misinforma-

Freedom of movement of the Kurdish forces has been sharply reduced but their fighting strength has not been seriously impaired. As the military prepared for their assault on Mahabad, guerrilla sources made it plain they would not seek to defend the towns against the army.

Several thousand heavily armed guerrillas now roam the mountainous border country, where conventional forces can follow only with difficulty. The guerrillas may lack organization and fighting experience but not determination. And now they also nurse a bitter grievance against the revolution

The army takeover of Mahabad and other town has not so far been accompanied by arrests and purges like those carried out in Paveh and Saqgez But the city's inhabitants live with the expectation of a visit from Sheikh Sadegh Khalkhali, the clergyman sent by Avatollah Khomeini to clear the vestern provinces of 'counter-revolutionaries.'

That brought the summary trials and execution for more than 80 Kurds, of whom four were sho last Wednesday. Last winter the cities of Iran were full of photographs of the bullet-shattered bodies of the those who died in street confrontations with the Shalis security forces. The gruesome color snaps now making an appearance are of victims of revolutionary

It remains to be seen whether Iran's leaders will seek to conciliate or whether the army will be launched in hazardous pursuit of the guerrillas to their mountain strongholds.

Ayatollah Khomeini has promised a day's oil revenues — roughly $ 75 million — to finance development schemes in Kurdistan (and every other province).

But there is no evidence of government willing. ness to deal with leaders such as Sheikh Ezzedine Hoseini and Abdurrahman Qassemlou, backed by the great majority of Kurds but under virtual sertence of death by Khomeini. — (OFNS)

Congressmen's junkets cost taxpayers a bundle

By Mark Gruenberg

Members of the U.S. Congress spent nearly $4 million in public funds on foreign travel last year.

The cost was a record, but congressmen didn't tell taxpayers about almost half of it. Congressional Quarterly 's annual survey of congressional foreign travel found that 293 senators and representatives took a near-record 505 government-paid trips abroad in 1978. But more than 40 percent of the cost of those trips went unreported, according to CQ estimates.

Most of that was for military jets to fly congressmen At least 128 government-paid trips, including more than half of the foreign trips by senators during 1978, were not disclosed in official foreign travel reports, CQ found.

Federal law requires members of Congress to file reports on government-paid foreign trips, disclosing their destinations, amounts spent, names of staff members traveling and, in the case of the House, dates of travel. Most of the reports are printed in the Congressional Record..

The high number of unreported trips underscores the gaping loopholes in the system Congress uses to report official foreign travel. For example, the law did not require a report for an $80,433 trip to Central Europe sponsored by the House leadership.

Even the official reports do not disclose the full cost for airplane and escorts' expenses. Congressmen officially reported spending a record $2,215,922 on foreign travel during 1978 almost $700,000 more than the previous high of $1,532,386, which Congress reported spending in

However, an examination by  $\boldsymbol{CQ}$  of Defense and State Department records found that the real cost of 1978 foreign travel was much higher than Congress reported:

- Providing military transport aircraft for overseas congressional missions cost the Defense Department an estimated $1,464,000 more than Congress reported it paid the military for transportation. The Defense Department absorbed the difference.

— Military escorts accompanying congressional missions reported spending $35,219 more for such things as food, beverages and camera film, than they were reimbursed by congressmen. Again, the excess was absorbed by the military.

When these unreported costs of congressional foreign travel are added to the expenditures disclosed for 1978, the total for the year climbs to $3,715,141.

Beyond that, 34 members of Congress participated in six overseas presidential missions to papal investitures and funerals and to the funerals of former Italian Premier Aldo Moro and former Israeli Prime Minister Golda Meir.

Cost of the military air flights alone for these executive branch missions was estimated at more than $355,000 by CQ, but this figure was not included in determining total congressional travel

CQ also estimated that members of Congress flying abroad on military planes used more than 1.7 million gallons of jet fuel. The figures does not include jet fuel used by members who traveled abroad on commercial flights.

Last year was the first election year since CQ began keeping congressional foreign travel records in 1965 that the number of traveling members and the number of trips increased. The 293 members traveling and 505 government-paid trips each set new records for an election year, breaking marks set in 1966. The trips were taken by 66 senators and 277 representatives, or more than half the members of Congress. The number of government-paid trips abroad was the second-highest total since CQ began compiling travel statistics. The largest number of trips abroad was 544 taken in 1975, a non-election year. In addition to the government-paid trips, CQ found that congressmen took at least 85 trips or legs of government-paid trips that were financed by private organizations or the members themselves. For the third consecutive year, Rep. Stephen J. Solarz, D-N.Y., led congressional travelers. He took seven trips abroad, more than any other member of Congress. One of those trips and part of another were not at government expense. Sen. Abraham Ribicoff, D-Conn., was the most frequent Senate traveler, with five foreign trips, all at government expense. Only 26 senators and 170 representatives reported no government - or privately-paid foreign travel in 1978 - down from 40 senators and

220 representatives who reported no trips the pre-As usual, congressmen expressed differing views over the value of foreign travel. Rep. Keith G. Sebelius, R-Kan., who went to Japan and the People's Republic of China Nov. 18-Dec. 3, said, "I have told my Kansas constituents that I think they certainly got their money's worth."

Rep. David E. Satterfield III, D-Va., said, "All of my trips have been extremely busy and taxing. have always learned a great deal from talking to the in-country personnel involved. I also find that while you usually go abroad for one purpose, you wind w getting information and briefings, as I did Taiwan, on something else that later comes up on

Rep. Robert McClory, R-III., said in a statement inserted in the Congressional Record that "as a delegate to many conference of the Interparliamen tary Union, I have been able to serve the interests of our nation while gaining an enugurening standing of numerous problems and interests of

But some members took a different view of foreign travel.

Former Sen. Maryon P. Allen, D-Ala., said neither she nor her late husband, Sen. James B Allen, D-Ala., "ever traveled to other countries. acting officially in any manner .... We accepted to honoraria of any sort, no expenses, either for food, lodging or travel. In other words, the Allens weren't Freshman Rep. Ron Paul, R-Texas, who did not serve in Congress in 1978, introduced a bill in April that would require advance disclosure of the desinations and costs of all foreign House travel, and require a three-fourths vote of the House to authoríze each trip.

"I believe the American people are sick (of) lush foreign trips for (members) and their staff," he said This misuse of tax funds must be ended .... (The trips) are as scandalous as a government grant w study Australian aborigines. Both are pure ripoffs." (Congressional Quarterly).

Puerto Rico: the 51st State?

By Ellen Hume and Don Shermor

SAN JUAN, Puerto Rico - On this poor but sugary island 1,000 miles off the Florida coast, a political showdown is looming with serious implications for the rest of America.

Puerto Rico's 3.2 million residents, who have been U.S. citizens since 1917, are showing signs of increasing unhappiness with their currentCommonwealthstatus - a status that brings - substantial benefits but also consigns Puerto Rico to a constrained, dependent condition that many here find galling and unhealthy.

As a result, two years from now the people of Puerto Rico will take a crucial plebiscite: Do they want to retain their second-class citizenship, seek independence as a separate nation or try to make Puerto Rico the 51st state?

"It's like two people who have been together for a long time," a San Juanbusinessman concluded as he considered the island's relationship with the mainland United States. "They have to decide whether to get married or not."

The ultimate decision will have enormous economic, political and social consequences for Puerto Rico, of course. But it will also have a substantial impact across the Caribbean and in the United States as well.

The issue is the hottest political topic on the island, as much a part of life here as sunshine, Salsa music and rich black coffee. It is also a touchy subject in Washington, where the U.S. Congress ultimately will decide whether to go along with the Puerto Ricans' choice.

It appears now that advocates of statehood will win a slight majority in the 1981 plebiscite. That would lead to a formal request to Congress, which could grant statehood by a simple majority

Because Puerto Rico was taken over by the United States during Spanish-American War in 1898, many U.S. officials believe that the United States has a moral obligation to grant Puerto Rico whatever status it desires.

But many fear that, if Puerto Rico asks for statehood, a small, violent minority bent on independence will turn the island into another Northern Ireland. Others are concerned that the depressed Puerto Rican economy - in which at least 70 per cent of the people qualify for food stamps — could become a drain on the U.S. Treasury if statehood is granted:

The uncertainty about the island's future has disrupted some business investments here during the last 18 months, according to a New York business executive who asked not to be identified. "There are revolutions in successful and some not," he said. "Businesses are very worried about stability. I sense something of a wait-and-see attitude on the part of business people about Puerto Rico."

Governor Carlos Romero Barcelo, 47, who is expected to win a second four-year term next year, is pushing vigorously for statehood. His greatest challenge is not the terrorists, or other political factions, he says, but Puerto Ricans' fear of rejection by the rest of the United States.

On the mainland, another hurdie would have to be cleared: "Ignorance about Puerto Rico," as Romero puts it. A Puerto Rico museum curator was more specific. "Puerto Rico has never been able to live down 'West Side Story," he said, referring to the famous "Romeo and Julier" style musical updated in the 1950s to a tale of New York street gangs.

Many Americans have sordid and not always justified impressions of Puerto Rico. They believe it is a foreign country where you can't drinks the water. They imagine it as a vast slum. They fear that terrorists are lurking near the tourist resorts.

The truth is more complex. It. can be seen in the superhighway between the skyscrapers of San Juan and the tobacco-growing village of Comerio, where most survive on U.S. food stamps. It can be seen in the seaside shantytown of La Perla and the posh gambling casinos of Condado. It can be heard in the diverse and sometimes discordant voices of the Puerto Rican people - the Puerto Rico-born mayor of Miami, Maurice Ferre; old Jibaro farmers in the mountains; radical students talking of revolution and violence; and 20-year-old Puerto Rican Naomi Cruz of South Bronx, New York, who came to the island for the first time this summer to learn the language of my people."

In many ways, Puerto Rico is the USA: Kentucky Fried Chicken, Kinney Shoes and 'Bonanza" on TV. It has the same electrical current, U.S. dollars and 15-cent postage stamps. Puerto Ricans bank at Chase Manhattan and shop at the Grand Union supermarket; if they are part of the growing middle class, they may live in Levittown outside San Juan and watch their children play baseball in the "Ligas Pequenas" — the little league.

But Puerto Rico is also an island unto itself, pungently — perva-sively — Hispanic. The architecture and cobblestones of old San Juan date back more than four centuries to Spanish colonial days, which began after Ponce de Leon came here in 1508 to subdue the Taino Indians.

Today the Puerto Rican people are a racial mixture of the Spanish slaves brought here in the 1500s to work the sugar cane, and Latin American migrants from more recent years. The original Taino Indians died out hundreds of years ago, but some ethnologists believe that the Indian blood survives in some remote mountain families. The language is irrevocably Spanish, a cultural distinction that the advocates of statehood vow to preserve. The music is Salsa-style, heavy on rhythm and romance. Puerto Rico's pastimes include such Latin favorites as dominoes, cocklighting and politics.

Puerto Rico has managed to cut its birthrate by half over the last 25 years, from about 40 births per 1,000 people to 20 per 1,000. Over one-third of the island's women of childrearing age have been voluntarily sterilized after having the number of children they wanted, according to a family planning expert, Dr. Samuel Lugo of San Juan's industrial hospital.

Still, the population is crowing at an annual rate of 3 per cent, partly because 30,000 more Puerto Ricans return to their island each year than leave it for the mainland United States, Many who return have made enough to buy a house or start a business on the island.

The island once was an agricultural paradise, growing sugar, plantains, exotic fruits, coffee and tobacco in abundance. But decades of exploitation by outside business interests and a major industrialization effort in the 1950s have disrupted that economic base.

Today about 40 per cent of Puerto Rico's rich agricultural land lies fallow. The island must import $ 1.2 billion worth of food, including coffee and plantains. " The basic problem of agriculture is not cultivation. We do that very well. The problem is marketing it, says Jose Madera, director of Puerto Rico's Fomento industrial development agency. Other, even poorer, countries sell their crops cheaper on world markets.

Puerto Rico has lost many of its apparel manufacturing plants to the neighboring island of the Dominican Republic, where wages are much lower. Similarly, most of the sugar molasses for Puerto Rico's beverages is imported from the Dominican Republic because it is cheaper. Wages there are just one-fifth as high as those in Puerto Rico.

The economic bind that Puerto Rico finds itself in is illustrated by its per capita income — $ 2,800. That is twice as high as the per capita income of any Latin American country. Yet it is also much lower than any of the 50 states, and the cost of living in Puerto Rico is about 20 per cent higher than in mainland USA.

A large part of the problem is that many businesses originally came to Puerto Rico because of its federal tax exemption and the supply of relatively cheap labor in a stable political setting. They had little interest in building an integrated, long-term economy for the sland. Until 1973, half of Puerto Rico's jobs were in tobacco, apparel, textiles and leather goods - industries that are particularly susceptible to downturns in economic cycles and that usually are dependent on lower wages.

Today a third of the island's jobs are still in this vulnerable sector, and unemployment is chronic. Only 56 per cent of the men and 28 per cent of the women in Puerto Rico have jobs compared with 77 per cent of the men and 43 per cent of the women in the 50

We're kind of caught in the middle ground," Andy Viglucci, editor of 'The San Juan Star, concluded. "We don't have a stock of really skilled technical people and yet we don't quality for low-wage industry." Puerto Rico's Gross National Product is $ 8.5 billion a year, and the U.S. government pumps in an additional $ 3.5 billion in food stamps, housing subsidies, welfare and other aid. The federal food stamp program here, which will cost $ 915 million in fiscal 1980, is used by 53 per cent of the island's families. The "cupones" are so much a part of Puerto Rican life that they have become a black-market currency. Puerto Rico would lose most of this federal bounty. As a state, it would be eligible for billions more. One qustion for Washington then is whether the new federal taxes imposed on Puerto Ricans under statehood would balance out this drain on the federal treasury. Some sketchy govemment studies argue that it would, but many observers are skeptical.

And some Americans take still another view. " The commitment we have made (to respond to a statehood request) is not going to give us economic benefits, but it's a moral commitment," according to Laura Hudson, an aide to Sen. J. Benett Johnston, who has long been involved in the Puerto Rico status issue.

" I don't see how, as a leader of the free world, as a leader against colonial adventurism, we could deny that to them," she said. "The conditions under which statehood would be granted, of course, are subject to negotia-

Ironically, when Gen. Nelson A. Miles landed on the wrong side of the island on July 25, 1898, during the Spanish-American War and seized it without a major battle, some Puerto Ricans thought he was coming to help liberate them. (Puerto Rico's first autonomous government — after four centuries of Spanish colonial rule had been in operation only a month under an agreement with Spain.)

But the islanders soon learned the truth: they were gaining a new colonial master. For decades afterward, the U.S. president directly appointed Puerto Rico's governor, judges and other key officials. Puerto Ricans were subject to laws made by a U.S. Congress in which they had no voice.

When Puerto Ricans were made U.S. citizens in 1917, cynics charged that it was only to provide more soldiers for the U.S. army. Since then, more than 200,000 Puerto Ricans have died in the U.S. armed forces.

Under their current Commonwealth status, Puerto Rican residents and businesses today remain exempt from federal income taxes but subject to most other U.S. laws. They must comply with the $ 2.90-an-hour minimum wage, job safety and pollution control standards

Puerto Rico's Commonwealth government is just like a state government, with taxes, an elected governor, a legislature and a massive bureaucrey. But Puerto Ricans still may not vote for president and their only voice in the U.S. Congress is a "resident commissioner" who can vote only in House committees, not on the House floor.

As a state, Puerto Rico would quality for seven house members and two senators and get more federal aid. But it would lose its federal tax exemption, the cornerstone of the island's fragile economy. I am absolutely opposed to statehood," declares 81-year-old former Gov. Luis Munoz Marin, the father of Puerto Rico's Commonwealth status. Loss of that exemption would ruin Puerto Rico, he believes.

Munoz Marin lives in frail retirement now, in a graceful old home in the rain forest near San Juan. Bamboo thicker than the width of a hand grows next to his favorite chair on the veranda. Four hundred trees shut out the sunlight. Small green lizards run back and forth.

"No system is perfect," he says "Commonwealth can be improved, but for Purto it is still

Munoz Marin is too old to continue leading his Commonwealth Party, and his Commonwealth dream shows signs of age. The bridge of Commonwealth status is crumbling, with support shifting to the opposite ends it once spanned - statehood and independence. Critics contend that Commonwealth status is politically humiliating and economically stul-

Munoz Marin's longtime nemesis, 75-year-old former Gov. Luis Ferre, holds forth in the marble splendor of the Puerto Rican Senate. Don Luis," is president of that body and, like Munoz Marin, a revered senior statesman of the island

"If we are to continue to depend on tax exemptions, we are build-ing on sand," said Ferre, who made his fortune in the cement business. "We cannot build on sand. The tax exemption is something we could lose anytime, a privilege from Congress that Congress could take away."

He believes statehood is inevitable. "It is a process of maturity. We are U.S. citizens. We must become a state of the union. Congress can delay it, Congress can set conditions to make it viable, but Congress cannot say no." Others are equally sure that Congress will never say yes.

"We are completely convinced that the U.S. will not grant statebood. We know it is not going to As an independent country, come," said Roberto Aponte, 32, deputy director of the Independence Party. "Commonwealth is not working... We have become so dependent in the last 20 years that people are now used to getting a handout and are used to not working...So independence is the only

> Although its party usually wins only 4 per cent to 8 per cent of the vote, the independence movement is gaining support among disaffected proponents of Commouwealth status. The party is led by charismatic Ruben Berrios, 40 who roomed at Yale Law School with California's Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr. and Sen. Gary Hart, of Colorado.

But how could Purto Rico possibly survive as an independent nation?

Berrios believes that the island could produce about 40 per cent of what it now imports, if the economy were geared to selfsufficiency rather than absentee investment and that there should also be some nationalization of industry and a hope of exploiting nickel and copper deposits in the mountains.

But there still would be Puerto Rico's total dependence on foreign oil. The Commonwealth's biggest industrial project, the Commonwealth Refining Co., was caught with fixed-priced contracts during the OPEC price hikes and had to file for reorganization under Chapter XI of the Federal Bankruptcy Act.

The island certainly would require massive infusions of U.S.

We would like independence with a Marshall Plan," conceded Raul Serrano, a retired Puerto Rico supreme court judge who is active in the Independence Party, You cannot create a dependent economy for eight decades and then say, If you want independence, we'll wash our hands of

An even more radical reordering of Puerto Rico's economy, based on the Cuban model, is advocated by the Socialist Party, led by Juan Mari Bras. Mari Bras has only an uneasy alliance with Berrios, who favors a European-type Democratic Socialism.

While Berrios' party seeks a peaceful disentanglement of the island from the United States. Mari Bras' group does not believe that is possible.

"I think a revolution is necessary in the long run," Mari Bras said in an interview. He sat surrounded by posters of Che Guevara and other revolutionary heroes. "It would include great periods of friction, including violence. We hope that can be as limited as possible."

At the posh sidewalk cafe across from New York's Metropolitan Museum of Art, two New Yorkborn Puerto Ricans sipped drinks on a hot August evening.

"Our position is that Puerto Rico has been at war with the U.S. since 1898," one of them, 32year-old Dylcia Pagan Morales, said. Her husband, William, was sentenced last spring to 89 years in state prison and 10 in federal prison for criminal possession of dangerous weapons, reckless endangerment and interstate transport of explosives.

He was caught last summer when a bomb exploded in his hands at what police described as a "bomb factory" in Queens. Numerous pieces of literature from the Fuerzas Armadas de Liberation National, the clandestine New York-based Puerto Rican independence group, were found in the apartment. Morales was seriously injured, losing his fingers and part of his face. But he managed to escape from his Bellevue Hospital room May 22 and has been at large ever since.

The FALN has claimed responsibility for at least 58 bombings in New York, Chicago and Washington since 1974. The most serious was on Jan. 2, 1975, when a bomb exploded in the Fraunces Tavern on Wall Street at lunchtime, killing four persons and injuring 53. "To us, it's kind of difficult to understand how this country, which had those 13 original colonies which fought for independence from Britain, can colonize other people," Mrs. Morales friend, Luis Rosado, 28, said.

Rosado was jailed for nine months last year after he refused to cooperate with a grand jury investigating; the FALN. He and Mrs. Morales are now trying to free Puerto Rican nationalists from prison, including three who participated in the 1954 attack on the U.S. House of Representa-and 51 injured. Governor Romero, a Yale graduate, is the man who more than anyone else is pushing the island to a statehood referendum in 1981.

"Prior to 1940, statehood seemed like an impossibility," he said. "From the point of view of being Catholic and the point of view of not being next to the mainland, these seemed like obstacles that were insurmountable. But when Alaska and Hawaii became states, then all of a sudden the non-contiguity barrier and the multi-racial barrier were eliminated, and when Kennedy became president the religious barrier was eliminated."

Support for statehood in Puerto Rico has grown from 12 per cent in 1952 to what Romero predicts will be a majority vote in the 1981 plebiscite. "This is like a snowbail." he said. "I am no longer pulling it, I am riding it."

Other observers predict that if the statehood advocates win, they will win by only a slender margin. And sources in Congress say that will not be enough for Congress to grant statehood.

very high degree of affirmative support on the island, but an expectation that the majority would win acquiescence from the minority," the Congressman said. "If the acquiescence seemed a very long and tortuous wait after the vote for statehood, then Congress would have to pause."

Romero disputed the idea that a large majority vote in Puerto Rico would be required by Congress. Which state of the Union nowadays guarantees that it would have a real large plurality for statebood, if they were offered Commonwealth status without paying federal income taxes?" he asked. Although Puerto Rico today is a welfare Commonwealth," it would not become a welfare state, Romero said.

"I don't think it would be a drain because I think, as a state, Puerto Rico would advance economically faster, and as the standard of living is raised then more people could afford to pay their taxes," he said. "Eventually the balance of federal taxes to Puerto Rico versus the payments by Puerto Rico would be comparable to those of other poor states." Romero believes that independence for Puerto Rico is "not viable, period." But if Congress did reject Puerto Rico's request for statebood, which Romero calls "an impossibility," Romero would head for the independence camp. "If my brother refuses me entrance to his home," he concluded, "I have no other way to go but to build my own home." -

Mennea shows sprint form

MEXICO CITY, Sept. 11 (AP) - Italian Pietro Mennes ran the fourth fastest 200 meters in history Monday before a heavy, steady rain forced the postpone-ment of two track and field finals in the 10th World University Games

Officials wanted to postpone three events. But the discus throwers would not leave the infield at the Olympic stadium, despite repeated attempts by officials to get them in out of the rain.

They stayed in the downpour, going about their business, ignoring the rain and the imploring officials and sailing the discus into the chilly showers, then squinting through gloom to watch it knife into the soaked and soggy turf.

Wolfgang Schmidt of East Germany eventually won it a throw of 61.78 meters, 10 meters behind his world record. Markku Tuokko of Finland was second at 59.82, followed by Antoinin Wibraniko of Czechoslovakia, 58.32.

Russians Andrei Prokofiev and Maria Koultchounova won two of the other three track and field finals that made up the bulk of the schedule for this biennial, multiple-sport festival that has drawn college-age athletes from 95 nations.

The victories put the Soviets all but out of reach of the competition in the quest for a successful defense of the overall title they won in Bulgaria in 1977. With

Tome sweet tome — on ice

CRYOGENIC LITERATURE: It's enough to send a shiver down your spine. Books on ice seems a novel twist on the theory of preserving knowledge for posterity. Over 40,000 tomes have recently been collected at a commercial freezer in San Jose, California, USA. And with the temperature 20 degrees below zero, it would seem that only the bright student would be attracted to the old and valuable books. The reason for the cold collection, usually based in the Stanford University Library in Palo Alto, is that they were caught in a flood during construction of a new wing at the university. The authoritess acted quickly... to save the books from permanent damage from mold scores of students and teachers loaded the books into boxes. From there they were placed into refrigerated trucks and taken to the 5,000 square-fit freezer. The rescue operation is only the first stage in the preservation of the collection valued at $ 1 million. Trained experts will attempt to remove moisture from the volumes with freeze dry equipment such as they use in the frozen foods industry. Then the ticklish job, cleaning, repairing and re-binding will begin. The whole operation is planned to take a year. Part of the 40,000 collection (above) is seen in the freezer. Books in their boxes (below) await the massive and chilly job or shelving them.

HORSING A ROUND: Fuel saving is the new international fad. People everywhere — well, nearly everywhere — are cutting down on the amount they spend on fuel and the amount they consume. In Mexico they have hundreds of years of reserves of oil but just as many Mexicans use the horse as those who go by motor car. In Barcelona, Spain, a former city official has gone back to using the good old dependable four-legged transport — man's best — or is it second best friend, the horse. Senor Febrer uses his horse for all his inner city travel and doesn't have to worry about the price of gasoline. However, he does have his problems. People have forgotten the stuff they used to shovel up for the rhubard, and folk do not take kindly to that anymore. Then there's the oats. He—it—the borse, must have his oats. And horse feed is no longer cheap. Then with vets fees, stabling, tackle and doctors bills when he falls off laughting at the traffic-jammed motorists — Senor Febrer might think it's cheaper to run a 3-liter Alfa Romeo.

MOUNTBATTEN MOURNERS: Sad, contemplative, serious, watchful, puzzled and indifferent... the camera captured all the expression of people who turned out for the passing of Lord Louis Mountbatten when he was buried at Romsey Abbey Sept. 3. The old brushed away their tears. The young walked silently beside them past the candellit coffin. They came in their thousands to Romsey Abbey some in jeans and anoraks others in uniform of black mourning, to pay their respects. Among the first in the queue proudly wearing his medals was 60 year-old Captain Sidney Glaskie from Manchester, one of many Burma Star veterans there.

LONDON, Sept. 11 (R) — Gulf States will hold talks with Lloyds insurance underwriters here on Thursday in an effort to rescind a Lloyds declaration of the Gulf as a war zone, Lloyds sources said Monday.

TRACTOR LOAD-CARRIER: This new 165-ton track-mounted load-carrying tractor made by Weserhutte in W. Germany is already being used in the brown coal regions of Czechoslovakia and Greece. The carrier, with its 3-yard-wide tracks, was designed for the heaviest kind of open-cast mining equipment and can move installations weighing up to 400 tons. It moves at a speed of 15 yards per minute. In its lowest gear it manages a maximum of 5 yards and when unloaded 30 yards per minute. The 10-yard long, metre-wide and 3-yard high transporter is powered by a 250 H.P. diesel motor. The Westphalian company, which also is known around the world as a producer of dredgers and excavators, extends its range of transport machinery for open-cast mining with this load-bearing caterpillar (presently available in three versions). The range includes track-mounted, rall and wheel vehicles as well as walking draglines and fork-lifts which can also be used to move heavy loads.

billion. This represented a sum equalling 1.12 per cent of the gross national product and was above the average amount achieved by the Western industrial nations of 1.05 per cent. In 1978, public development aid contributions amounted to some $ 2.3 billion. Private contributions by industry, the churches and other organisations amounted to more than twice this amount, namely $ 5.6 billion.

The market economy basis of the German economy has had much to do with the achievement of this result. Industry is called upon to involve itself with investments and other capital employment of funds providing that these appear to be important and justified seen from the development political point of view. In return, the state provides industry with tax concessions. As far as the Federal Government is concerned, it has yet to arrive at the 0.7 per cent target set by the United Nations for public contributions; however, this target is still being pursued. As a consequence, for years now the budget of the Ministry for Economic Cooperation which is responsible for development aid has grown annually to a greater degree than the budgets of other ministeries. For example, the overall budget this year rose by 7.8 per cent as compared with last year; however, the budget of the Federal Ministry for Economic Cooperation rose by all of 14.2 per cent. This reveals that Bonn is 0.7 per cent target.

In 1970, the overall private and public net contributions of Germany to the developing nations amounted to $ 3 billion. That corresponded to a 0.8 per cent share of the gross national product. Up until 1977, it proved to be possible to increase the total net contributions considerably; in that year, they amounted to $ 7.4 billion corresponding to 1.12 per cent of the gross national product. This corresponds to an average annual increase of 14 per cent.

If one compares the absolute contributions to the developing countries rather than the percentages, it is shown that Germany occupied third position just behind Great Britain with the United States taking top spot. In addition, Germany is the second largest client after the United States for industrial finished goods the developing countries. Furthermore, taken on a pro capita basis, Germany has purchased more goods from the developing nations than any other industrial country.

As a result of this policy, Germany's imports have increased from Third World countries from $ 13,4 billion in 1972 to $ 33 billion last year. This increase in imports exceeded that from the industrial countries so that the share of the developing countries with regard to total German imports has gone up from 18.6 per cent in 1972 to 21.8 per cent last

Experts at petroleum congress say

LNG reserves may ease crisis

BUCHAREST, Sept. 11 (AP) - Reserves of natural gas which could help ease the energy crisis may lie off the coasts of Canada, Spain and Venezuela, experts said Tuesday.

In one of several papers preented to a seminar of the 10th World Petroleum Congress, Canadian oil economist Neil McMillan estimated that Canada's Labrador Sea alone will yield 18 billion barrels of oil and four trillion cubic meters of natural gas.

Oil reserves of Alaska's Prudhoe Bay are estimated at 9.7 billion barrels. The Canadian reserves could become an important contributor to U.S. energy needs now that American domestic gas production has peaked. "The Labrador Sea has many of the earmarks of the North Sea," McMillan told the seminar. Many explorationists think that the petroleum successes of the Labrador Sea will in the end be found to match the North Sea."

He added, "nothing to date has been found to detract from this expectation.

A Texan geologist predicted that undiscovered oil and natural gas reserves probably exceed the amounts in known oil fields. Michel T. Halboury told the Conference that by the mid-1990s, half the world's oil production will come from fields not yet found.

He urged thorough exploration on an offshore areas, including Baffin Bay, the Trondheim coast of North and southwest Ireland "to meet the soaring demands for new petroleum supplies.

"The ultimate recoverable crude oil supplies of the world are estimated 304 billion tous," he told the delegates. "This includes 48 billion tons which have been produced through 1975, 115 billion tons of estimated remaining reserves and 141 billion tons of potential future discoveries." A former president the American Association of Petroleum Geologists, Halbouty spoke at the first full day's session of the weeklong conference, which brings together some 3,500 petroleum businessmen and experts from over 70 countries. Halbouty warned that unless the oil industry undertook a program of vigorous exploration, world reserves would fall dangerously low.

search for and find new oil reserves in order to establish enough lead time for the world's scientific and technological community to research, develop and produce in sufficient quantities other sources of energy which are needed for the long term energy requirements to be met." He called on governments to agree on proper regulatory frameworks which will enhance exploration."

World oil production was about 57 million barrels per day, Halbouty said, and it could grow to about 66 million parrels a day without any new discoveries.

If potential new sources are expected, production could top 90 million barrels, he added.

Natural gas and liquid natural gas will no longer be major sources of energy after the year 2000 unless new reservoirs are found quickly, another U.S. petroleum expert told the congress. A. A. Meyerhoff of Oklahoma said proven, probable and potential natural gas reserves stand at 6,950 trillion cubic feet, enough to last until the end of the century at present levels of consumption.

But, Meyerhoff said, vast amounts of natural gas and liquid natural gas are believed to lie undiscovered.

"Nothing illustrates this point better than the following statistic: 2,592,000 wells had been drilled in the U.S. as of Jan. 1 1978. But only 859,000 wells had been drilled in the remainder of the world."

Meyerhoff agreed that future gas supplies would come primarily from Siberia and the Middle East, although important resrves were believed to be in contained in the North Sea, Northwestern Europe, southeastern Australia and the shelf between New Guinea and Australia.

"The western Siberia Basin is overwhelming," he added. "The entire Soviet arctic shelf, the largest in the world, undoubtedly is uncertain in many places by very large gas and LNG reserves."

The Soviet Union is planning major development of facilities for extracting oil from shale rock, Soviet Technicians say.

In a paper presented at the Congress, Soviet experts said shale processing units capable of handling 1,000 to 3,000 tons of rock each day are under construction or on the drawing boards. "Oil shales are used on a commercial scale in the U.S.S.R." the report said. "They are utilized as pulverized fuel for large power stations and are subjected to thermal decomposition for the production of synthetic hydrocar-

= Frances Drake : FOR WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 12, 1979

What kind of day will tomorrow be? To find out what the stars say, read the forecast given for your birth

ARIES (Mar. 21 to Apr. 19) Worry about a work-related task could make you too open to others' advice. Restrict talks to trusted confidentes. The p.m. brings solutions.

TAURUS (Apr. 20 to May 20) Expenses for children and dependents may seem heavy now. A partner may have a belpful suggestion. Stick to less costly entertainments. CEMINI

(May 21 to June 20) If you feel you're not getting enough attention from a close one, the p.m. is the best time to bring the subject up for CANCER (June 21 to July 22)

Private worries could make you somewhat withdrawn. Avoid a buildup of tension. Instead, discuss thoughts freely with others.

Don't let worry keep you from attending a social func-tion. Others will be receptive to your thoughts and you'll come up with solutions.

(Aug. 23 to Sept. 22) Preoccupation with career affairs may put you out of touch with others' needs. Towards the late p.m. confidence replaces insecurity. (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22) Don't agree to a travel plan unless you're sure it's what you want. Explore alternatives, then make a decision. (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21) SCORPIO Expect little feedback from a friend about an investment plan. Confusion is a sign more research needed on your part. SAGITTARIUS SACITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21) Don't be oblivious to the needs of close ones because of career concerns. Attend & party together to further CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 19) Work progress may be slow now. Don't give up or postpone obligations. A friend or superior will give you a needed boost.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20 to Feb. 18) Entertainment plans subject to change. Friends may seem hard to pin down though the way is clear to make successful travel plans.

(Feb. 19 to Mar. 20) You may be uncertain about domestic or partnership concern. Avoid needless worry by having with an oldfashioned beart-to-heart talk.

Despite Pravda denial

U.S.not budging from troops stand

WASHINGTON, Sept. 11 (Agencies) -The United States is standing by its assertion that Soviet combat troops are in Cuba, and says that Moscow's denial is not helping to resolve the problem.

The State Department Monday night responded tersely to a Pravda editorial that said the only Soviet military personnel on the Caribbean island were belping to train Cubans to use Soviet equipment.

" It (the editorial) is not a helpful contribution to the resolution of the problem," the State Department said. "There will be no further comment."

In the most direct Soviet reaction so far in the dispute Pravda said Tuesday the number of Soviet soldiers in Cuba has not changed since 1962.

The Communist Party newspaper, made the assertion in response to U.S. charges that there is a 2,000-to 3,000-man Russian combat brigade on the Caribbean island.

While denying a Soviet troop build-up in recent years, the front-page Pravda commentary does not specifically respond to charges that there is a large Soviet military force on

The Pravda commentary did not report the meeting Monday between U.S. Secretary of State Cyrus R. Vance and Soviet Ambassador Anatoly Dobrynin who discussed the Vance has said the administration of President Jimmy Carter has known that the Soviet has kept military advisers in Cuba for many years. He said the recent discovery that 2,000 to 3,000 of them were organized as a combat unit, however, was causing serious concern. The last official Soviet comment on the Cuban situation appeared in the Soviet news agency Tass on Sept. 3, when the Soviets also charged the United States with trying to " mislead delegates to the representative international forum (nonaligned conference) in the Cuban capital."

Neither the Tass nor the Pravda reports specifically deny that there are 2,000 to 3,000 Soviet troops in Cuba.

The State Department's response appeared aimed at reminding the Russians of the effect that an inflexible attitude could have on some U.S. politicians, who are demanding the troops' withdrawal as a condition for approval of the new U.S.-Soviet strategic arms accord, SALT II.

The United States government has not demanded outright that the troops be removed, leaving the door open for a com-

Vance is also due to meet former Secretary of State Henry Kissinger, who has sharply challenged the Carter administration over

Prior to Monday's meeting, State Department spokesman Hodding Carter said the two would discuss the matter thoroughly and other meetings were expected. The presence of the Soviet troops in Cuba was disclosed 10 days ago. Dobrynin returned on Sunday after home leave in the Soviet Union. The spokesman said Vance would make certain the Soviet envoy fully understood that the United States viewed the matter seri-He said Vance would stress that the existing situation" will have to be changed." But he stopped short of saying the United States would demand the withdrawal of the combat troops from Cuba.

London conference opens

Rhodesia combatants begin battle of words

ants in Zimbabwe Rhodesia's seven-year-old bush war Tuesday set out bargaining positions expected to prove as far from accord as their distant battlegrounds.

Confronting each other across a square negotiating table in London's historic Lancaster House are Bishop Abel Muzorewa's bi-racial government, including the stillpowerful white leader and former Premier Ian Smith, and their swom adversaries, the Patriotic Front guerrilla leaders, Robert Mugabe and Joshua Nkomo.

The talks, aimed at drawing up a new peace constitution for Britain's rebel colony, opened Monday with a call by the chairman, British Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington, for both sides to compromise.

But hardly had the brief opening session been adjourned when discord began to

Smith, speaking at a British-hosted reception boycotted by the Patriotic Front because of recent Zimbabwe-Rhodesian raids into Zambia and Mozambique, said he was in no mood for appeasement or compromise just for the fun of it.

Lord Carrington told a British television interviewer there was a big gulf between the two sides. Nkomo, seemingly rejecting British insistence that the conference first discuss a new constitution for Zimbabwe-Rhodesia, said "we are not going to dscuss a constitution without first removing the causes of the war' an order of priorities promptly rejected by Lord Carrington. The conference is intended to draw the warring factions into a peace settlement based on an internationally acceptable constitution and fresh elections supervised under British authority.

Lord Carrington Lord Carrington, outlining British peace proposals, called for new elections with Commonwealth observers when he opened the conference. At present Muzorewa leads the territory, which seized independence from Britain in 1965, under a constitution that allows whites to retain wide powers and which has won no international acceptance. The Patriotic Front calls Muzorewa a puppet of the 230,00 white minority which broke away from Britain to resist pressure for black rule. The gulf between Salisbury and the guerrillas was illustrated by an incident in the lobby of the luxury London hotel in which Patriotic Front leaders are staying. Mugabe stopped on his way through the lobby to watch a television program about his country, seeing the land he left four years ago to become leader of the biggest guerrilla army fighting the war. Suddenly the scene switched from film of tribal dancing to an angry and aging white woman reviling Mugabe and his followers as terrorists and murderers. Mugabe looked on grimly before striding off to meet Nkomo to discuss joint strategy The talks, called to end one of Africa's cruelest and most costly wars, got off to an inauspicious start with the guerrillas complaining about seating arrangements and boycotting Monday night's reception, much to the glee of Muzorewa's delegation which wants to project the Patriotic Front as conference wreckers. But dissent with the British proposals has already come from both sides in the preconference rhetoric which Lord Carrington is hoping will give way to negotiations on what he has called a "very difficult" issue.

Three main issues will dominate the Rhodesia peace conference: the powers to be retained by the country's white minority, the question of further elections, and control of the armed forces. The first and last go to the heart of the dispute which has bedevilled the British breakaway territory — whether any settlement can be reached which can bring in true black majority rule while providing sufficient assurances to the beleagured whites to convince them to stay. Under the so-called internal settlement reached by former premier Smith and three black leaders last year, the whites retained a strong position in the day-to-day running of what is now called Zimbabwe Rhodesia.

Although - 230,000 whites are outnumbered by 6.8 million blacks — the minority hold 28 per cent of the 100 seats in parliament and maintain control of the security forces, judiciary and civil service. Whites, regarded by themselves and Muzorewa as essential to the smooth running of the Zimbabwe Rhodesian economy, are already leaving the country at a rate of about 1,000 a month because they fear there may be a black civil war.

kids, get hungry and cry and dirty his nap-pies? Did he have 'mishaps' as he was held by his granny? Did John Kennedy suffer from "nappy rash" like all children? Did he climb a tree in his family home and shout "Me Tarzan"? And did the neighbor's daughter answer the future president, "Me Jane"? Did Jean Paul Sartre's mother call berchild to dinner in vain? Did she, as she wondered aloud if he was really there, hear a small voice saying gravely: "I am answering, therefore it am"? Did Picasso's mother smack him on the hand for running the walls with his drawings? Did she wonder what good the child will be it all he can do is scribble on walls? It is difficult to imagine Napoleon crawling as a baby. That same scourge of Europe and Russia (before facing "general winter" there.) Did Nietzsche, the philosopher of the Superman, happen to fall from his pram one

The reader will notice that I have avoided mentioning any Arab personage. This was partly out of caution. The other reason is that we are perhaps still in that happy age of falling from prams and having "mishaps" when carried by grannies — but please don't quote him. No one in the White House has talked to me on that" O'Neill added. In the past O'Neill declined to comment on a Carter-Kennedy race, saying only that he expected Carter to be renominated and reelected and that be did not consider Kennedy a candidate. His statements Monday, made at his daily news conference, go considerably beyond those previous comments.
